

Journal of Higher Education Policy
And Leadership Studies

JHEPALS (E-ISSN: 2717-1426)

<https://johepal.com>

Book Review:
Operationalizing
Culturally Relevant
Leadership Learning

Derrick Raphael Pacheco

*Graduate Assistant,
Leadership Learning Research Center,
Florida State University, USA*

Email: dpacheco@fsu.edu

Book Review Received
2022/02/18

Book Review Accepted
2022/03/23

Published Online
2022/03/30

Cite book review as:

Pacheco, D. R. (2022). [Review of the book Operationalizing culturally relevant leadership learning, by C. C. Beatty, & K. L. Guthrie (Eds.)]. Journal of Higher Education Policy and Leadership Studies, 3(1), 185-188. DOI: <https://dx.doi.org/10.52547/johepal.3.1.185>

Pacheco, D. R.

Operationalizing Culturally Relevant Leadership Learning

Journal of Higher Education
Policy And Leadership
Studies (JHEPALS)

E-ISSN: 2717-1426
Volume: 3 Issue: 1
pp. 185-188
DOI:
10.52547/johepal.3.1.185

Author: Cameron C. Beatty &
Kathy L. Guthrie (Eds.)
Publisher: Information Age
Publishing
Country of Publication: USA
Year of Publication: 2021
ISBN: 978-1-64802-658-4
Pages: xv-259

Derrick Raphael Pacheco ***

Keywords: Culturally Relevant Leadership Learning; CRL; Leadership Education; Operationalizing; Narratives; Complexity; Higher Education

As a continuation in the series titled Contemporary Perspectives on Leadership Learning, Operationalizing Culturally Relevant Leadership Learning, explores the ways that leadership educators utilize the Culturally Relevant Leadership Learning Model (CRL) in their everyday work as educators, practitioners, and scholars. The text contains thirteen chapters in which the conversations and applications of CRL are emphasized with authored texts and narratives from scholars and practitioners in various fields of study. As we open the conversation around culturally relevant leadership learning, it is important to understand the meaning of the term, “culturally relevant”. It is important to note that for leadership educators to focus on socially just and culturally relevant leadership education, we must focus “on moving toward a more socially just leadership praxis by offering a pedagogical approach; one that considers the complexities of leadership educators” (Beatty & Manning-Ouellette, 2018, p. 230) and of those around us.

*Corresponding author’s email: dpacheco@fsu.edu

Book Review

CRLI has a goal of being “responsive to inclusion and matters of equity and positions leadership educators to address the complexities of social inequality in leadership learning” (Bertrand Jones et.al., 2016, p. 11; see Guthrie et. al., 2021 for additional resources about CRLI) and this book offers a space to engage with this framework, and as the title suggests, operationalize this model in our work as leadership educators. Although not explicitly stated, this book can be seen as separated into three different sections, an introduction to the culturally relevant leadership learning model framework (Chapters 1-3), operationalizing, implementing, and applying the culturally relevant leadership learning model framework in different environments (Chapters 4-10), and finally, the intersections of CRLI with socially just leadership education and additional resources on how to start and where to continue this work (Chapters 11-13). Throughout the text, there are narratives that are shared from leadership educators that offer a unique perspective into contextually operationalizing the culturally relevant leadership learning model.

The first chapter of the book invites us into a conversation to interrogate the CRLI and its applications. As outlined in the chapter, it is our responsibility to interrogate these frameworks to better understand and operationalize them in our work as leadership educators in curricular and co-curricular spaces. The second chapter of the book builds off the foundations of leadership education and CRLI that were presented in the previous chapter to help us understand more of the specifics and mechanics of what encompasses CRLI. The five critical domains of CRLI (history of inclusion/exclusion, compositional diversity, psychological, organizational/structural, and behavioral dimensions) are explored to help us cultivate an understanding of these domains and our personal leadership process (Bertrand Jones et. al., 2016; Beatty & Guthrie, 2021). The third chapter of this book builds off the first two chapters and showcases the environmental contexts that need to be considered when operationalizing CRLI. This chapter specifically examines how our national, institutional, and personal contexts play a role in operationalizing CRLI and our roles as leadership educators in that process.

The next two chapters of the book focus explicitly on personal and professional development utilizing CRLI as a framework to engage with. The fourth chapter of this book emphasizes the ways we can operationalize CRLI in a way that advances our personal development. In this chapter, we are introduced to the narratives and lived experiences of leadership educators and how they have utilized the CRLI framework to work on aspects of their personal identities ranging from teacher identity, racial and ethnic identity, and accountability, to name a few. The fifth chapter of this book emphasizes the ways we can operationalize CRLI in our professional development as leadership educators. In this chapter we are introduced to the narratives of individuals who are advancing their professional identities utilizing the CRLI framework. From a narrative speaking about specific identities as leadership educators in specific contexts, to narratives about utilizing CRLI as a framework for anti-racist work, this chapter helps center the lived experiences and context of professional identity development within CRLI.

The next four chapters of this book highlight the ways we can develop and implement the CRLI in both curricular and cocurricular spaces. The sixth chapter of this book highlights program development in cocurricular spaces. Although these teachings are centered around the work of higher education professionals, it is important to acknowledge that the teachings from these conversations and narratives can be applied to different fields outside of the education field. In this chapter we are introduced to the narratives of student affairs professionals from a wide variety of functional areas such as student conduct, student organizations, and graduate student leadership programs, to name a few. The seventh chapter of this book shifts the conversation to implementing CRLI in cocurricular programs. This chapter highlights the narratives of leadership educators who serve in a practitioner lens on college campuses and within leadership learning organizations. These narratives address some of the successes and challenges that come with operationalizing CRLI in their programs.

Pacheco, D. R.

The eighth chapter of this book shifts the conversation from cocurricular programs to curricular and academic programs and how they used CRLI as a framework to guide their work. The narratives presented in this chapter talk about the experiences of leadership educators who serve in academic roles and their development of academic programs. Some of the topics these narratives touch upon in the chapter range from culturally relevant syllabus development, course creation, and perspectives on experiential learning. The ninth chapter of this book allows us to see how the conversations and narratives of the last chapter were implemented, specifically in courses that are meant to create change agents and that centered the understanding of leadership from other cultures. These specific narratives allow for academic programs and departments to gain a glimpse into incorporating CRLI into their specific courses and understanding the value that it presents in curricular spaces.

The next two chapters of the book allow us to see a glimpse into how we can utilize CRLI and apply it towards theoretical frameworks in scholarship and how we can incorporate CRLI into socially just research methods. The tenth chapter of this book gives us a glimpse into applying CRLI to interrogate traditional and emerging theoretical frameworks in our scholarship. As outlined in the chapter, there has been a call for “stronger empirical evidence in order to develop and implement high-impact practices in socially just leadership education” (Chunoo et. al, 2019; as cited in Beatty & Guthrie, 2021, p. 161). The narratives presented in this chapter highlight ways in which CRLI was used to better understand different identities as a researcher, and how to fill in literature gaps as they pertain to the five domains of CRLI. The eleventh chapter of this book highlights the need to include CRLI in socially just research methods. The narratives provided in this chapter center CRLI and how it should be utilized, alongside research methods, to develop a socially just approach to our research agendas both in and out of leadership education.

In the final two chapters of the book, we are reminded of where we should start with this work and are given some suggested resources to better engage as leadership educators with CRLI. In chapter twelve, the authors review the initial concepts covered in the book surrounding CRLI and its five domains. This chapter highlights the way we should start doing this work, which at times, may be the most difficult part of this process. In the final chapter, Chapter 13, additional resources are presented to offer leadership educators the opportunity to further engage in this work of culturally relevant and socially just leadership education. At the conclusion of each chapter, the authors provide a table with questions we should consider as they relate to the each of the five domains of CRLL. These critical questions allow us to engage in critical reflection. Based on the experiences that critical reflection provides us, we can see that reflection allows us to “analyze our experiences and engage in learning in order to synthesize knowledge” (Volpe-White et. al., 2019, p. 25).

Book Review

All in all, the purpose of this book is to showcase the need to incorporate culturally relevant and socially just practices into our praxis as leadership educators. After all, we are invited and asked as leadership educators to interrogate these practices to better inform our field (Beatty & Guthrie, 2021). This book does just that; by highlighting the narratives from leadership educators and the ways in which we can operationalize and implement CRLL into our praxis, we are able to develop a deeper understanding and appreciation for the work presented in this book to advance the field of leadership education.

References

- Beatty, C. C., & Manning-Ouellette, A. (2018). The role of liberatory pedagogy in socially just leadership education. In K. L. Guthrie, & V. S. Chunoo (Eds.), Changing the Narrative: Socially Just Leadership Education (pp. 229-243). Information Age Publishing.
- Beatty, C. C., & Guthrie, K. L. (2021). Operationalizing Culturally Relevant Leadership Learning. Information Age Publishing.
- Bertrand Jones, T., Guthrie, K. L., & Osteen, L. (2016). Critical domains of culturally relevant leadership learning: A call to transform leadership programs. In K. L. Guthrie, T. Bertrand Jones, & L. Osteen (Eds.), Special edition: Developing culturally relevant leadership learning. New Directions for Student Leadership, 2016(152), 9-21. Wiley.
<https://doi.org/10.1002/yl.20205>
- Guthrie, K. L., Beatty, C. C., & Wiborg, E. R. (2021). Engaging in the leadership process: Identity, capacity, and efficacy for college students. Information Age Publishing.
- Volpe-White, J. M., Guthrie, K. L., & Torres, M. (2019). Thinking to Transform: Reflection in Leadership Learning. Information Age Publishing

Mr. Derrick Raphael Pacheco, M.S., C.N.P. (he/him/his/el) is a first year Ph.D. student in the higher education program at Florida State University. Derrick currently serves as a graduate assistant for the Leadership Learning Research Center at Florida State University and is a lead instructor for the Undergraduate Certificate in Leadership Studies. Derrick currently instructs a course centered around Latinx Leadership Development and has had experience as a teaching assistant in other courses in the certificate. Derrick’s research interests lie in the intersections of leadership identity and Latinx identity development and how upbringings, culture, and tradition impact our leadership identity in different contexts. Derrick also is interested in socially just leadership education, racial and ethnic identity development, gender and sexual orientation identity development, and first-generation college student access and success.

This is an open access article distributed under the terms of the Creative Commons Attribution-NonCommercial 4.0 International (CC BY-NC 4.0) which allows reusers to distribute, remix, adapt, and build upon the material in any medium or format for noncommercial purposes only, and only so long as attribution is given to the creator.